The table shows the percentage of job satisfaction of 100 people working for a large company over four years. The table demonstrates that overall there was a decline in job satisfaction.

Firstly, there was a gradual decline in satisfaction with job security. In 2010, 80 percent of the employees were satisfied with job security, but in 2013 the figure was only 65 percent.

In addition, fewer people were satisfied with the pay they received in 2013, compared to the pay in 2010, with the figure dropping from 85 percent to only 70 percent.

However, the area which saw the biggest dissatisfaction is relationship with bosses where less than a half of the employees were satisfied with their relationship.

The only area which didn't decline is 'opportunities for personal development'. Although it didn't decline, it has only remained almost the same over the period. At the beginning of the four-year period, 67 percent of people were happy with opportunities for development and in 2013 it was 68 percent.

9 Sample answer

Today, social networking has become a part of most people's lives. Most people can have access to it and they upload their personal photos and information, announce parties, make people aware of important issues and even find people they've lost contact with. However the effects of all this connectivity are not always good.

Firstly, students are often spending too much time on social networking sites and not enough on their schoolwork. This can lead to general problems at school and a failure to get the exam results needed to follow their career path. On the other hand, they may discover information about a different career which is just right for them.

Another effect of social networking is that some people have suffered a lot of stress from bullying. It's much easier to say horrible and unkind things to people when you can't see them or when they don't know you, especially when someone puts all their personal data and feelings and information on their sites.

It can be argued that this anonymity is a good thing, but it can sometimes result in people finding themselves in dangerous situations, especially if they have put their home address on the site for everyone to see. Criminals might follow them, watch them or even attack them.

However, the effects are not all negative. Through wider global communication, people can learn to understand each other better and sites have been used for people in conflict areas to tell the world what's really going on in a country.

It seems that social networking is here to stay, so we need to solve the problems caused by it and focus more on the positives.
